Subject: [External] Proposed Dominion Rate Increase

According to recent news, "After its annual review of the costs Dominion incurs transporting and buying fuel, the company found that it was around $142 million under-collected in fuel costs, according to officials." Now they are asking for a utility rate increase to fund this oversight. Please explain how this huge corporation is able to retroactively collect what they determine as "under-collected" and will this be standard operating procedure in the future? What about all the homeowners and businesses that have been impacted by inflation and unexpected fuel prices that we have no control over (let's call it "over-paying")? People are already stretching their incomes and making big sacrifices. Raising our utility rates at ANY percentage rate is a really bad idea.
